The Queen Canal was part of a series of interconnected canals along the Detroit and Niagara Rivers that began in the 1830s. The canal was built with an iron tubular fabric that was used extensively for the construction of the Erie Canal system. The Windsor-Detroit Partnership and Grand Bend Tourism Inc. are planning a celebration on July 19 in Windsor that will include a catered social, military re-enactment with a commemoration ceremony, and the unveiling of a new historical sign. Maurice Grollier, a member of the Windsor-Detroit Partnership, said the partnership is working with Grand Bend Tourism Inc., local historians, and the Royal Canadian Legion of Windsor-Essex to plan the event. "We're just excited about having this special milestone," said Grollier. Marilyn Fitzsimmons, executive director of Grand Bend Tourism Inc., said she is pleased to be involved with the event. "Grand Bend Tourism Inc. is very pleased to be part of this celebration," she said. "It's a great opportunity to have this 100th anniversary. We also love the canal itself. We think it's an iconic piece of Canadian history, and to celebrate the 100th anniversary, we just thought it would be a great event." The dredge is the replica of one built for the event. It will be part of the salute to the volunteers who worked on the canal and was used to sort the through ballast from the sand and dirt. A sod turning ceremony will take place after the unveiling of the new historical sign. Community historian Chris Lehman said the dredge is being

The aim of this study is to investigate the morphological differences in the crystalline lens between tapering- and peak-shaped forms of methylphenidate in a human eye. Cataract surgery was performed on the eyes of 17 patients who were clinically diagnosed as tapering-shaped crystalline lens. Two patients were incidentally found to have peak-shaped crystalline lens. The crystalline lens was removed together with anterior vitreous cortex after an IOL implantation. The cataractous lens anterior was stained with Giemsa dye. The molecular forms of methylphenidate were analyzed using high-performance liquid chromatography. Morphological differences between tapering- and peak-shaped crystalline lens were investigated with a scanning electron microscope. Under scanning electron microscope, a crystalline lens with tapering form showed two smooth, clear corneal boundaries, whereas a lens with peak-shaped form showed four sharp edges. Tapping-shaped crystalline lens exhibited a smoother outline of the anterior boundary than a peak-shaped crystalline lens did. It was suggested that tapering-shaped crystalline lens had both hyper- and hypo-density contrasts. In tapering-shaped crystalline lens, the hyper-density contrast could be seen just behind the anterior cortical surface, and the hypo-density contrasts could be seen in a central convex surface. Furthermore, the tapering-shaped crystalline lens did not show a clear cleavage between the denser and less dense portions
